

To Whom It May Concern:

I believe that the content of XM radio, including its traffic and weather channels, is not in direct competition with that of my local stations. It is a service provided above and beyond the traditional music and news offered by radio and is a benefit to myself and other XM listeners.

Leaving aside constitutionality issues; the progress of the American economy is successful due to the competitive nature of our business structures. This fuels innovation in every industry and has taken the broadcast medium from its humble beginnings in radio dramas (which are also a portion of the XM programming available on their more than 100 channels) to streaming content available at the click of mouse in more than 1,000,000 homes across the country.

Innovations like this would not be possible if the government felt the need to stifle an industry's progress simply to support those that did not want to evolve with the needs of the customer and the capabilities of modern technology. For myself and others, I ask that you allow nature to take its course and progress to prevail on all sides by not interfering with the constitutional right of XM and their PAID listeners to bring quality content on ANY issue right to the car.

Sincerely,
Aleshia Bonilla

"If you dim your light so that others can shine, the whole world gets darker."